

Bringing the Station House in Campsea Ashe back into use for the benefit of local residents, neighbouring villages, visitors, public and voluntary organisations, businesses in the local area and beyond.

Station House Community Connections was established in 2013 to transform the Station House into a new facility to support rural communities in East Suffolk. With its central position on the B1078 and increasing passenger numbers through the station, the house is ideal for improving access to local information, resources and services.

Empty since 2006, it is too large either to be maintained as a railway service on its own or as a public building within the village of Campsea Ashe. The key to its future lies in combining the strengths of its historical purpose and heritage with a wider community function. Many original features will be reinstated, and full planning permission has been granted for new social, business networking and learning opportunities to ensure there is something for everyone.

Station House Community Connections is a new form of community organisation, with charitable objects at its heart, that allows both fundraising and trading activities to ensure sustainability. In partnership with other organisations, we can help to deliver local and wider community benefits.
